new partners to introduce

In the last three months we have expanded relationships and added new distributor partners, all of whom you can utilize now as our client or author:

- * Novelwriter, a premier non-exclusive electronic book (eBook) publishing house, in Amsterdam, Holland;
- * eBook development for sale through Rocket eBook; and
- * the Tucows' software download store.

This means that we can place, distribute and promote your work through 12 channels now and even more in the future.

along with projects & interviews

The development of two new editions of Mrs. Susan Kaszas's book and an interview about the state of electronic publishing top our current list:

- * The Linux® and Macintosh® editions of "A Mother's Shoah" in Web and Adobe Acrobat eBook versions on CD were released February 16, marking the start of our product rollout schedule for the year.
- * Tara Calishain of StudioB.com had a Q&A session with our publisher, Steve Kingsley, which you can read here.

Don't forget - we'd like to see your work cited here too!

Think about it. How you create, develop and deliver your work changed so much just over the last decade, you can't help but speculate what it will be like by the end of this decade. So let's flash forward. More and more of us will be able to work from the comfort of our own living room, den or deck. Advances in telecommunications, multimedia technologies, ubiquitous computing and the information economy will come in spades. There will be companies providing personal virtual experiences of any kind. Others will make money selling huge directories of data. Your creative works, products and ideas will have world wide marketplaces. Instant exchanges will determine their worth and sell them to the highest bidder. And if you think this is too much to ask for, answer this - would you have thought 10 years ago that we'd go back to having our milk delivered by something called an Internet grocer?

We will be riding atop these brave new content creation, management and sales trends. Just keep sending your flashes our way, so we can make them work for you too.

eBook by Stephen King
